

And we woke up,
in our beds,
side by side,
or maybe separated.

And the fan was still on,
that same familiar sound,
the cat stared out the window, yet there was nothing to see.

Outside,
not a single car passed by
and the people walked quietly, six feet apart from each other,
so as not to disturb
the security,
the balance,
they had just regained.